You would consider upgrading this automatic "word of the day" feature? Granted, I recognize the disclaimer that the word on any given day is generated randomly. This, however, is why the user cannot adjust it, not a fact that makes it impervious to the developer who modifies the software. The problem, in my view, is simply that the words are too simple. My experience with these novelties is that they highlight words that are not usually found in common usage, in order to expand their vocabulary. Your app, on the other hand, serves a daily dose of irretrievably banal nouns and verbs; for example, "rodeo" and "nibble", respectively, as two recent offerings. As such, the feature is not informative at best and, unless you turn off the notifications completely, a nuisance.

The distinct OED should expand the mind and vocabulary of the educated user, not satisfy popularity in pursuing the least common denominator among the crowd. Please consider this reasonable software update. Thank you for your attention to my concern, understood constructively, or so, as a long-time faithful adherent to the OED.
